They lie all the time. I have so many instances but one I can share is the 7th grade science teacher at Basha last year, Mrs. Kiefer - lied over and over again. Administration was provided proof and the excuse was "you have to excuse her" and then proceeded to tell me about her personal problems. Later, the dean tried to gaslight me. This kind of thing went on and on all year and the teacher kept getting away with all kinds of lies and horrible treatment/verbal abuse to students to at least one of her classes (my son's). The last month of school she called the class a 'bunch of assholes'. Several students and parents complained and when the investigation was complete, they determined it was not an issue because the other two classes she has had nothing bad to say about the teacher. Therefore what we all complained about didn't happen. They are masterful at gaslighting. Talk to [REDACTED] or fb page - she's a long time student advocate in Chandler, been fighting the CUSD system of abuse on various topics for a very long time. I will tell you this - your daughter's situation is not new, not abnormal to what the district covers up and unfortunately CUSD has a huge budget for lawyers and resources to make things go away. If you're too loud - they will ban you from your daughters school or any CUSD property. Chandler police back them up. I have seen it play out in many situations. Go to the school board meetings. It is pathetic and you will cry at the kids and parents begging for help to change things. It is horrible but you will see you are no where near alone. We moved our daughter to Gilbert district years ago and it is night and day! My son is still in CUSD, for now. Will see if he makes it through a CUSD high school b4 we have to move him. This is a mount Everest for you to climb but you will have support from families for sure. Whether or not CUSD changes things will depend upon how deep you want to go into your pocket. It'll take a millionaire to battle CUSD and win.
